About Anawim

Anawim has been working with women in Birmingham for the last 40 years. We were founded in 1986 by two pioneering nuns, Sister Magdalene Matthews and Sister Maisie Nevin, who moved into a red-light district in Balsall Heath. They decided to open their home as a drop-in centre to women in the local community who were involved in sex work and vulnerable to exploitation.

The Sisters were struck by the difference it made for women to have a safe space, a warm drink and a listening ear. A place they could go without fear of judgement, to meet other women who cared deeply about their wellbeing. Motivated by unconditional love, an appreciation of the value of every woman, and a commitment to helping people to live life to the full, the Sisters' mission continues to inspire us.

Our Work

Over the years Anawim has grown – and continues to do so – and we now have around 70 staff. Last year was Anawim's busiest, with 2,100 women accessing support and more than two-thirds had a caseworker. There are many ways to access our services, through drop-in – which is open to any woman for any reason – courses, counselling or caseworker support. We offer holistic gender and trauma responsive care to any woman who comes through our doors. As well as our centre in Balsall Heath we work in two prisons and a forensic mental health unit.

The benefit of this work goes beyond the women directly impacted. Our campaigning can influence government policy, our data is used in research papers, and every woman we work with is connected to others, all of whom could be affected by her. For example, each woman diverted from prison could mean a family staying together.

The FABULOUS 40th

Our Fabulous 40th is a chance to celebrate all the work that has been done over the last four decades, and we are hoping to fill the New Irish Centre in Kings Heath with supporters from across the years.

The evening will be hosted by local legend, and star of Phoenix Nights and Britain's Got Talent - Barbara Nice (Janice Connolly). We will also have a headline set from a well known TV comedian and one of Birmingham's best DJs Mazzy Snape to help us dance the night away.

A buffet dinner and welcome drink are included in the ticket price.
